

HOME & DESIGN: COLORADO

REFLECTING BEAUTY

With every design, Megan Daughtry enhances and transforms lives.

In a state known for restorative natural beauty, Colorado designer Megan Daughtry is reimagining how private spaces can become a sanctuary all their own.

"It's all about investing in your well-being," says Daughtry, founder of Proud House Studio. Prior to founding the full-service interior design firm and showroom, she spent 15 years in the West Coast's fine dining industry while harboring an intuitive design sense fed by her father, an architect.

"His philosophy included cultivating mutual respect and partnerships with every tradesperson," she shares, a tenet central to her own approach. Combined with service skills honed in upscale restaurants, Daughtry creates spaces that exhibit meticulously planned work.

Most important is forming connections with clients, who inform every detail of the designs. Case in point: the Oakleaf project.

"The clients were outgrowing their space and realized they could never replicate their home's location, which is next to a neighborhood park," Daughtry shares.

An addition on the back led to an open-concept main floor with an expanded kitchen and dining area, while in the basement, new rooms provide space for growth. Luxe marble finishes throughout complement the gray, white, and blue palette—a sleek combination that alludes to the wife's home country of Sweden. Custom cabinetry provides tailored storage for outdoor gear, and multipurpose spaces include room for international guests, every inch attesting to Daughtry's eye for the minutest of details.

Today the home effuses calm and boasts the functionality needed to serve the family for years to come.

"It's fulfilling to discover clients' personalities, values, and how their house can function well and reflect what they think is beautiful," Daughtry concludes.
